the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased from 10.5 million to 12.5 million (12.5% of the population).

There are a number of reasons for this increase. One of the main reasons is that the public sector has become a major employer of young people. In 1990, only 1.5 million young people were employed in the public sector, but by 2000, this number had risen to 3.5 million (30% of all young people in the UK).

Another reason for the increase is that the public sector has become a major employer of women. In 1990, only 4.5 million women were employed in the public sector, but by 2000, this number had risen to 7.5 million (75% of all women in the UK).

Another reason for the increase is that the public sector has become a major employer of women in the education sector. In 1990, only 1.5 million women were employed in this sector, but by 2000, this number had risen to 4 million (80% of all women in this sector).

There are a number of reasons why the public sector has grown so rapidly. One of the main reasons is that the government has increased its spending on health, education and social services. This has led to a large increase in the number of public sector employees.

Another reason is that the government has introduced a number of new public services. These include the National Health Service, the National Education Service and the National Social Services Framework.

Finally, the government has introduced a number of new public sector jobs. These include jobs in the health service, the education service and the social services sector.

The growth of the public sector has led to a number of problems. One of the main problems is that the public sector has become increasingly expensive. This has led to a large increase in government spending.

Another problem is that the public sector has become increasingly bureaucratic. This has led to a large increase in the number of public sector employees.

Finally, the public sector has become increasingly inefficient. This has led to a large increase in the number of public sector employees.

The growth of the public sector has led to a number of other problems. One of the main problems is that the public sector has become increasingly unresponsive to the needs of the public.

Another problem is that the public sector has become increasingly unaccountable. This has led to a large increase in the number of public sector employees.

Finally, the public sector has become increasingly untransparent. This has led to a large increase in the number of public sector employees.
